

I oppose the Indiana Bankers Association's effort to weaken the Indiana Privacy Law and think this would undermine the intent of the law. It is a way to share information that I personally do not want shared without my express consent. It is this disregard for privacy and individualism that makes me a loyal credit union member versus a regular bank member. I do however, have a home loan, and would not appreciate that bank sharing my information, i.e. phone number with other sources, again without my express consent. Clearly I took the time to join the Indiana Registry for a reason.
